Dr. Tatsuya Nakada is a well-known international law specialist, who has a track record of working for the government office in Japan and with extensive international experience.

Last week, he was invited to go and meet with the president of the national university UNAM in Namibia, who happened to have also visited Kobe University this year, in order to strengthen bonds between Japan and Namibia, and between Kobe University and UNAM around common research themes related to international maritime laws and policies, and especially the problems of ship wrecks, of which Dr. Nakada is a specialist. According to both parties, we can expect the two universities to continue and accelerate their relations on both education and research.
